SABLON - MAROLLES DISTRICT "DESIGN AND TRADITIONS"

Description:

© JP Remy - OPT

Lovers of antiques, art objects, ultra chic shops and outside café tables, this is the district you've always dreamed of! This district owes its name to the sandy plain on which it was built. Close your eyes and dream: Grand Sablon dons its finery of gold and glitter during the Christmas holidays, and then it becomes one of the most remarkable places in the city. The proximity of the Royal Museum for Fine Arts, of BOZAR, of the Museum for Musical Instruments, of the Palace of Charles of Lorraine, of the Royal Palace and the place Royale make it a special place for exploring. More below, you are drawn into a charming world... welcome to les Marolles! Far from luxury and ceremony, the Brussels' zwanze pervades this working-class district, which is more than 800 years old.

By means of numerous historical documents, visitors discover the major historical periods of our country. Three reading levels enable you to pass from the general context to the evocation of the most remarkable facts, via a number of starting points to better understand today's Belgium, such as the fight for universal suffrage, the world wars, and the "The Question Royale", the golden sixties or the recent state reforms.

The different exhibition rooms form one continuous trail and also show the reign of each king through a series of works and portraits which characterize the sovereigns' personalities and the royal family's image with the general public.

Remarkable by its Romanesque and Romanesque-Gothic architecture, it is accordingly one of the most interesting in Belgium. One of its chapels is devoted to the memory of Pieter Breughel the Elder and his wife, Marie Coucke. In the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament, a commemorative plaque serves as a reminder that François Anneessens, the leader of the guilds who was executed for having defended our communal liberties, is buried there.
